What's True About "the Debt"

Part 1

The 'debt' really does exist, but only because we operate in a 'debt-money' system. There is no substance; i.e.: money which we can use to pay our debts. Since we, the private, are now the only ones who can create anything of any value, the public (a dead, bankrupt fiction), must rely upon us to make everything happen and that includes creating more debt for everything to function. We all think of 'debt' as a bad thing, yet, it is only how this particular economic system operates. So, 'being in debt' is a neutral situation – neither 'good' nor 'bad'. 'Zero-balance' means that everything is at zero. If the public draws from zero, within a liability/debt account, they have a negative; if they add to zero, they have a positive, yet, because it is all debt/liability, they can have negative debt and positive debt. 'Debt' is not bad; it just is.

Conversely, we, the private, create credit. Every time we sign anything, we create credit. "The signature is the money". There is an asset account, backed by the birth certificate, the application for which was signed by a parent, thereby creating a trust account. It also must have a zero balance. When we draw from it, there is negative asset and when we add to it, there is positive asset. The public operates in debt/liability and we operate in credit/asset, AND NE'ER THE TWAIN SHALL MEET (except via a token, aka a 'Name'); one account cannot connect with the other. The public operates from debt and we operate from asset. The minute our asset touches the public, it becomes debt and the instant public debt touches the private, it becomes asset. Let's use the power bill as the example:

The power company has access to the trust account, from which it draws, in order to have the capital to provide us power. At the end of the month, those at the power company send us a 'statement of account'. What the top part is telling us, without actually stating, is, "We went to your asset trust account and withdrew $100 in order to provide you power; is that alright with you, Creditor? If so, please just evidence your acceptance of this by writing on this statement, 'Accepted, the account number, the number of the bond backing the account, which only you would have, and your signature.' As we have sent the cheque for you to endorse, which will bring your trust account balance back up to zero, please sign and endorse it and return it to us with the statement so that we can balance our books." The story is the same for credit-card statements.

What they actually write is, "Be sure to return the voucher with your payment", thereby misleading us to think that we are required to give them $100 worth of our labour, along with their cheque which offsets the liability, and nothing else. They are simply soliciting our agreement which our signature indicates. So, the voucher/cheque will balance not only their books but also the asset trust account. But somehow, we got roped into forking over our debt-notes (which they want as much as we do because we all use dollars to obtain what we need and want, yet have nothing to do with the account with the power company). These debt-notes have nothing to do with "paying our bills"; there is nothing to 'pay', nothing with which to 'pay', and the account cannot be 'paid' – it can only be offset with the cheque/voucher they sent us for our signature.

Now, our cash is in the public and ought not to be because the public doesn't operate in cash; it operates via double-entry bookkeeping, 't-charts' of asset and liability, because there is no 'money'. Since all these debt-notes are out there as "the debt", in the "public", this means that we are the cause of the “public debt” which must be offset. But, what we are told is that the public debt must be “paid” and, of course, this is impossible because if we ‘pay’ ‘public debt’ with ‘debt’, all that occurs is that we double the debt. The only way out of this mess is for us to do whatever it takes to remove the debt-notes, aka ‘cash’, aka ‘the debt’ from the public. For a long time, we thought that we had to offset the public debt, but the public debt has not been caused by anything other than our having put cash where it not only doesn’t belong and cannot be used in any productive manner but also is creating havoc with the economy. Now that we know that we must get the debt out of the public, so that there is no more ‘public debt’, how do we recall the trillions of dollars of debt?

We call in the biggest, best, most-efficient debt collectors in the world: the IRS. If they can’t do it, no one can. So, by filing the correct forms with the IRS, we let them know how much of our cash/labour/debt-notes we have errantly put out there into the public. We are so sorry we made this ridiculous mistake, but, we took the word (“Be sure to return this voucher with your payment” – hmmm. I guess I have to send a cheque along with the voucher – BEEEEP! Wrong-o!) of people at corporations, forgetting that corporations are “for-profit”, faceless, heartless, entities with no intent other than ‘economic growth’ and to control the planet through the use of our energy. Sure, we might encounter a friendly voice at the other end of the phone, but she has been as programmed as the rest of us in our thinking that we are obligated to “pay our bills”. Very few of us know that with every dollar we put into the public and neglect to claim it back, we are creating more and more problems for our fellow man, never mind for ourselves and our families.

IRS to the rescue! Filing the proper forms at the proper time will allow the IRS to go back to the banks which are withholding the tax – the credit we created by writing cheques, wiring funds, using debit and credit cards, etc. and request that the funds be returned to the creditor. The IRS will gladly deposit, into our bank accounts, that which the bank has been withholding, in escrow, because when funds are in escrow, no one can use them. They are just sitting there. THAT is “the public debt”. If we don’t get the debt moving and functioning, we will be taken down by it. Our cash/labour/debt-notes will sit in escrow, doing nothing, for 36-47 months (depending upon when we put our cash into the public) when both we and the banks could be using it to continue to circulate and keep the economy moving. After this time, if we have failed to claim our abandoned cash, the banks will. THIS might be why banks got a bad name, yet, what’s true is, we created our own problem by not knowing that we are responsible for recovering the funds and keeping us all out of debt. Our claiming a refund of our public funds will work for all involved.

The worst thing that is happening, right now, is that the public debt – our cash which we could all be using – is sitting and stagnating, in escrow. Only we can do something about this. The two causes of this huge problem are: (1. people are not requesting their funds be returned to them; and, (2. due to fear, people are slowing their spending. The staggering truth of all this is: the more we spend, the more we get returned to us. The faster they spend, the sooner we will get the funds returned to us. We must do a complete 180° flip on our regard and assessment of “the public debt”.

I write this only because realize that I cannot suggest to most people that we must remove ourselves from the Commerce Game. I am reminded of an old Beetle Bailey comic. Several soldiers are sitting around a table, playing poker; cigarettes are falling out of ashtrays or hanging from their lips, beer bottles are covering the table; soldiers have nearly fallen asleep on the table but are still holding their cards in their hands, with one eye open, etc. They appear completely exhausted, drunk, and dazed. Two higher ranking soldiers appear and one looks at the other, amazed by the idiocy of what he sees. The other officer says, “Well, no one wanted to quit when he was losing, no one wanted to quit while he was ahead, and no one would let the winner quit..." "How long have they been at it?" "Four days." I think many of us are in this poker game. Will it ever end?

I suspect that we will have to do this for awhile before we feel avenged. I guess we have to experience "win" before we realize that there is no "win" when we are playing a game ... the winning of which is based upon clobbering our fellow man.

Part 2: What's Next?

Turning 60 afforded me some insight: Winning a game that exists only as a result of the projection of our fear for survival is still not a place where we want to hang out for any length of time. We can all see what is going on in the world. Anyone reading this will agree that, thanks to quantum physics and mechanics, an endless list of people have proven that what we see in 'the world' is purely, simply, and solely a reflection of what is being projected by the thoughts in our minds, propelled by the emotion in our hearts, at any given time. Life on this planet is nothing like what we have all been raised to believe it is – not even close.

From the minute we arrive in this fictional world, we realize that there is an authority in our lives. We know that if mums do not feed us, we do not eat. Not much later, we grasp that everyone is trying to run our lives. Parents act authoritatively because their parents did so with them and they are only, unconsciously, projecting onto their children the way they were treated. This is simply the memory of the cell and, I hear, a specific part of the cell which holds memory, not the DNA which, until recently, we all thought.

Next, we go to school where we drown in authority. School is deliberately designed for our left brains. Socializing, games, art, and music are all right-brained and, although we are not discouraged from pursuing these, they simply are 'not as important as' the core subjects which we had to know, in order to graduate, in order to get a good job, in order to compete with and beat-out our fellows, in order to succeed in life. Are we there, yet? Academia never made anyone happy. I never had a conversation, with any friend, about academia, unless said friend were a teacher and his/her position was the "defence of" education or authority ... bleah! This is how children, full of creativity, spend the bulk of their childhoods – around people telling them that school is too serious a place to socialize which, we all discover, albeit too late, was the only reason we were there in the first place. What is life all about, anyway?

By the time we reach the age of seven, our core beliefs are: I'm not good enough; I'm not worthy; I'm insignificant; I'm not lovable; I don't exist; I don't have a life; I don't have a future; life is frightening, life is dangerous; I'm not allowed to make a mistake; if I make a mistake, I will be punished, ergo, I shall not venture forth because I might make a mistake; life is easier when the 'authorities' tell me how to live. These beliefs came from decisions we made, as children, when we were threatened, – when we feared for our very survival. These beliefs are 'compounded annually', at school, and are precisely what allows the alleged "authorities" to run our lives ... completely. These beliefs force us to defer to these authorities, whether they be parents, relatives, teachers, doctors, ministers, bankers, lawyers, judges, cops, peers ... "grown-ups", or whether they be the matching concepts of these, such as family, school, medicine, religion, commerce, law, what's vogue, the latest fashion, etc. ... anyone whom or anything that we have deemed to be 'better than', 'wiser than', 'more successful than', 'happier than', 'making more money than', 'in possession of more stuff than', 'trusted by more people than', 'receiving more attention than' ... we are.

When we focus on what is outside of us, we completely miss the most valuable aspect of life: our intuition. When we fail to listen to our intuition, which is the only source from which we can know what is best for our unique selves, we become one of the crowd which is so, so, so easily controlled by those whose intent it is to control us. What is the means by which we are controlled? To be kept in the vibration of fear – the same level of frequency at which we were when we made all those decisions about how we cannot live our own lives.

When I receive emails which are fear-filled, I know that the people who sent them are in fear and they are desperately seeking agreement because misery loves company and they want to be told how to live, in order to stop feeling the fear. For those of you who do this, please realize that you are the instigators of the fear and that you have been manipulated into feeling the fear by those who want you in fear because fear is the only emotion by which you can be controlled. Brave, courageous people who know who they are cannot be controlled. They might feel fear, yet, they do not take action from fear. They behave contrary to the disempowering emotion of fear.

If you are one who spreads fear, you make your own life worse, as it is emotion which creates life, so, being in fear, you create fearful circumstances. Egos love to waste your time looking for evidence and agreement. Egos love 'to be right'. You are being entrapped by your own mind. There is nothing 'wrong' with feeling fear, as long as you don't DO anything about it. There is nothing going on 'out there' of which you need to apprise us; there is only what is going on with your thoughts and emotions which need to be assessed. If you intend to bring others into a fear-filled existence, can you see that you are part of the problem? If you want your circumstances to change, you must opt to be part of the solution: change the thoughts you entertain.

Fear for our survival is 'base (first) chakra' energy. All the other 6 (at least) chakras are above it. Imagine life for those who never get to live beyond first chakra energy. They spend their entire lives in fear for survival and, as is the wont of the ego, they go about gathering proof that they are 'right' so they look for situations and people who also see life as fearful. This does not make them accurate; it only makes them 'right' which is the sole 'reason for being' of the ego mind. It lives to prove itself 'right'. Egos prefer to be 'right' than 'happy'. Don't fall for this nonsense.

I learned from my RET (Rapid Eye Technology) teacher that when we are, figuratively, 'kicked in the heart' which seems to happen to all of us in our early years, we all move away from our heart (4th) chakra which means that, in shifting our consciousness away from 'heart', the heart energy itself becomes diminished. No wonder heart disease is rampant! Interesting, men and women interpret this trauma differently and they shift both their energy and focus (their consciousness) 2 chakras away from the heart, yet, in different directions. Men shift down 2 chakras and women shift up 2 chakras. Men's energy moves down into their second (sex) chakra and women's energy moves up into their sixth (intellectual) chakra. Is there anyone more annoying than men whose "feelings" are about sex and women whose "feelings" are intellectual? Since that includes most of us, just think of yourself and everyone close to you. We've all heard the complaints, "Men, quit thinking with your penis!" "Women, get out of your head!" In my book, I described the treachery and horrors of the feminists who thought that corporations would be better off with women at the top. This might have been true, had these women remained women, but, they didn't. They put on suits and became men. Just what we need – more testosterone in the workplace. Believe me; masculine women are vastly more dangerous than feminine men. (Think 'female cops', as opposed to 'male interior designers'.)

The same people who operate the schools operate medicine, law, religion, politics, etc. We have literally been programmed to death. I mean it: we have been programmed completely OUT of knowing who we are when, in fact, only we can educate ourselves, heal our bodies, intuit what is best for us, evolve spiritually, and operate at such a high frequency that NONE of what society has to offer ought to have any appeal, whatsoever, to the spiritual beings that we truly are. How low class all society is! How plebeian! What dregs we have become! Yes, even those of us who have achieved what appears to be success. We were destined for much loftier positions than that where we allow others to presume authority over us. Who allows this and why? You know, now. It is we and it is our inability to “feel” and intuit. Do you see that all the institutions and establishments of society are designed this way, so that we are unable to feel and intuit? But, who or what created our society?

Getting back to quantum physics and mechanics, we all now know that what is in our lives began with us. In our fear, we projected onto our world our thoughts about ourselves, via our emotion which was and is, for the most part fear. We now know that what appears to be “out there” in the world is the effect, manifestation, and reflexion of what is going on within us. This is why trying to heal anything, in what appears to be “our world”, is absolutely futile if we do not correct the cause.

When I worked as a nurse, I was always disappointed to hear that a patient was intending to undergo any sort of surgery, but surgery “to get the cancer” made me the craziest. I had learned, from experience, that if I advised a patient not to allow a surgeon, who is totally uneducated on how the mind works, to chop off her breast, the only result was that I got fired; the patient still lost her breast. So, I realized that this is what the patient wanted; even though I knew she had been manipulated into wanting it. Inevitably, the patient was pleased by her loss of a breast (!!!) and would proudly tell me, “He got it all”, meaning, the doctor got all the cancer out of her body. I was never able to resist asking, “Did he get your mind, as well?” Since the cancer began with her thoughts, interpretations, judgments, and decisions, about a traumatic event in her life, and brought into the physical realm via her fear, anger, or grief, the only way to get rid of it was to reverse-engineer the process. Begin with the emotion, get back to the thinking, then to the event, and release everything along the way. Chopping off breasts is neither a solution nor even real.

“Reality” is not real; the only thing ‘real’ is “we are”. Any seeming physical solution is, literally, truly, and only, as David Icke says, “combing the mirror” when one has a bad-hair day. It will have NO impact, whatsoever. When people fail to correct the cause of cancer, it always returns. Ask any cancer patient. If she has not taken a look into her life, she will go right back to where she started. There is no healing outside the mind; there is nothing outside the mind. When I say “mind”, I mean that which gets projected – a combination of: an experience, our interpretation of it which results in our thoughts, our judgment about those thoughts which results in a decision, and any combination of fear, anger, grief over that decision which creates our experiences in what we call “life” and the cycle begins again, with the experience we have just now created. What absurdity! This is why I can say that life is truly insane and what is prompting us to believe that we can do anything about life, outside ourselves, is total insanity. This includes: ‘helping another’, as we can only be an example, hence, we are almost always in an upward or downward spiral of life events because how we see the previous is how we will experience the next event. We are always in this process. I am fortunate only in that I am aware of it.

We cannot do anything; we can only be; there is nothing out there; there is only here; we cannot pre-empt for the future and we cannot correct the past; we have only now. Is this how the mystics, sages, and masters of life arrived at: BE HERE NOW?

Now, we ought to take a look at all this in relation to how we are trying to correct the corruption on the planet. Every aspect of what is 'wrong' in this world is caused only and completely by commerce. All of it. But, let's start by recalling that everything we think we see "in the world" is only a reflection of our best thinking and it all began with us. Everything we experience is due to our core beliefs which are caused by decisions having been made from fear for our survival and the world we see is the effect, caused by our projected fear. I'm not saying that there isn't love everywhere, all the time, in all of us, for everything; I'm saying that what we see in the world is simply the effect of most of the thinking, done by most of us, most of the time, which is the cause of all our angst.

Since love is all there is, it is all encompassing and can have no opposite. Since fear – love's seeming opposite – cannot exist, it is unreal. If fear is unreal, then anything ostensibly created by its projection is equally unreal. Since the world we experience is the physical manifestation of our projected fear, then the world is unreal.

"Nothing real can be threatened; nothing unreal exists." – A Course In Miracles

This puts us into a vastly more powerful position, to change it all – all that which is not real. How simple! How powerful! If what is going on in the world truly were real, we would have a hell of a time trying to change all that! This is not to discount those who really are making a difference, but the real difference begins with their feelings, now with their actions. Every day and in every way, people all over the world are intending to accomplish this irrational, impossible, insane feat of changing the world without addressing the cause which is the game we are playing, based upon the projection of our fear for our survival, based upon the belief that we are separate from one another – the Commerce Game. The solution to the world problems caused by the Commerce Game is right here, right now, with me. My choosing love instead of fear is the solution.

In my book, I set out to prove my premise that the banking system is fraudulent. I prevailed. I did experiments which proved it. These same methods could not be used now, in order to prove this, because what I did was years ago and those who didn't like what I did are now on the look-out for those who intend to do the same things. So, cops, courts, judges, et al now know how to thwart us, in a myriad of ways. What I've noticed, over the past 13 years, is that everything any of us have done, works – a bit. Every process we have ever tried has succeeded, at least for some of us, for some of the time, in some places. Then, it doesn't. Judges go to "judge school" every 6 months and learn how to handle those of us who have temporarily prevailed. Then the process comes to a screeching halt.

I finally woke up and reconciled what I know to be true with what I know to be true. We are doing this to ourselves. We are actually brilliant enough to have set up a situation, for the sole purpose of learning that the only thing in existence is love ... the only thing in existence ... is love. Everything else which appears to be in existence is unreal, doesn't exist, is reflection, effect, and cause of thinking which is combined with strongly felt emotion.

The tragedy is that our emotions have been manipulated by society. We have been entranced and prevented from feeling the only emotion from which we can co-create. Feeling love is how to become love and is how to have it be the way we all want it to be. We can manifest only from love. Love is such a high frequency that it puts us back into the driver's seat. As long as we are in fear, we are being manipulated. The only way to remain in control is to be willing to be out of control. The very willingness to be out-of-control is love. Love is a 'willing' emotion and nothing is more powerful than love. I adore the actual statistics on this. The electricity of the heart is 100 times that of the brain and the magnetic power of the heart is 500 times that of the brain; unless it is vice versa, but, either way, if we want to be powerful, we must operate from the very place which we long ago shut down and created a society which kept women intellectual and analytical and which kept men sexual. What a waste of our true talent and energy!

We have all been fleeced, yet, again, who did this to whom? Our world is a manifestation of our thoughts and feelings. Knowing this allows us to do something about it. We are not helpless against our own creation. If this were the creation of the evil entities of this universe, we'd be sunk, but this simply isn't so. Yes, our thoughts and feelings are being manipulated, via the Authority Hoax and all other aspects of our societies, but ULTIMATELY, WE ARE IN CHARGE OF THE THOUGHTS WE ENTERTAIN AND THE FEELINGS WE EXPERIENCE. OUR ACTIONS FROM THOSE THOUGHTS AND FEELINGS ARE WHAT DICTATE OUR LIFE ON THIS PLANET.

We are so in charge that we designed a game in order to wake us up to our true nature and our true intent – to shift into the love frequency. The commerce game can be won only by realizing that we created it for our benefit. Every seeming adversity to our lives is to trick ourselves to see if we can remember. We came here knowing that love is all there is, yet, in order to play the game, we had to forget. We even went so far as to identify with the token (the body, the name) we use to play the game. We truly cannot 'beat an opponent' in a game which was designed for the purpose of allowing us to realize that the only way to win is to remember who we are and to remember that nothing exists without love. Its almost existential, isn't it? Like ping pong balls in your head.

We cannot see the picture whilst seeing it from inside the frame. Once we truly walk away from the game, very miraculous things will be revealed to us. We know there is more. No one, in the past several hundred years, or in a society such as ours, or subject to a belief that we would be both winning and losing against ourselves, has experienced what we are about to experience. When we take a chance on our faith that our higher self – intuition – connection to source – subconscious mind – spirit self – co-creator – oversoul will take care of us, not only will it do so but also it will give us everything and more than we could ever imagine. If we stop to wonder "how", we have just, energetically, denied the entire process.

What are we doing?! We choose to trust a treacherous system of society – commerce – that has been proven to be not only completely unworkable but also downright vicious for 95% of us, while, in the case of our higher-self – our oversoul, which is connected to omniscient, omnipotent Source, and whose only job and full intent is to mind our complete well-being, via its wisdom, insight, and timelessness ... we choose not to trust that?! In fact, we completely ignore it?!?!?

So many people lecture on spirituality, yet, they continue to charge their fellow man for lectures, books, etc. They are at the very pinnacle of our third dimension, so they appear to be very enlightened, yet, their failure even to glimpse the 4th dimension is evidenced by their belief that they have to charge their fellow man. I don't think the problem is that they want more 'money'; I think the real problem is that "not charging" (being free) has never even occurred to them. What does this tell us about their level of spiritual development?

There is an entire universe out there which we can access, utilize, and appreciate, if only we operate in the frequency where all is possible. Miracles appear for those without fear. So many of us have experienced miracles, just by letting go of the game: we quit charging our fellow man, quit worrying, and now trust that our oversoul will take care of us.

We're all one; we are all the same at our spiritual core; we are all co-creators with love because we ARE love. We can do this.

Update: June 8 2009

I want you all to know 4 things:

1. I am in the process of writing another article. I'll be tackling the subject of "commerce" from another perspective.

For those who want to remain in the Commerce Game, I recommend Brandon:
www.creditorsincommerce.com

For those who are interested in getting out of the Commerce Game, stay tuned. I'll post an article, soon.

2. There are several websites where people are selling my book. My book has always been, is, and will always be free online at: www.spiritualeconomicsnow.net/solutions/How_I_08.pdf

3. I delete all the comments on my blog because I have discovered that 90% of them are spam, 7% are nonsense, 2% are vicious, and only 1% are from people who are still thinking and feeling. It is not worth my time to read them all for so few insightful comments. My apologies to the 1%.

4. I found, on YouTube, the Twilight Zone episode I saw in 1960, that I mentioned in my book. Here is part 3/3, with the pertinent message:

IRS/CRA and the LOTTERY

It just crossed my mind that you might be unfamiliar with the banking system. Allow me to use the "Lottery" as an example. People generally use cash to buy lottery tickets. The lottery pot is about $20M at any given time – CASH! If you won $8,000 in the lottery, you would take the ticket for verification. Would someone go to the cash drawer and count out your $8,000? No; he would write you a cheque. If you accepted the cheque and never did anything with it, nothing would occur. Nothing would change. No accounts would be debited; no accounts would be credited. That cheque is valueless until you endorse it. When you do, suddenly, it is worth $8,000. What's different? Your signature is what gave it value. This can be verified in §57.1 of the Bills of Exchange Act of Canada (your law) which states that the signature is the money.

Now, if you were to deposit that cheque, your account would be credited. If you were to cash the cheque, the bank would give you $8,000 cash. Then, what happens to the cheque? Its value to the bank is quite incredible because that credit can off-set the liability of your cash receipt or account credit and, now, their ledger is balanced at no cost to the bank.

Banks are permitted, by law (the Bank Act), to hypothecate the value and lend it out numerous times for dramatic profit. (For details on how banks make a fortune from your signature, Google: Money As Debt). Suffice it to say that the cheque became a huge asset – vastly more than its face value. So far, you have benefitted a bit and the bank has benefited a lot, by your signature, but the real winner, by far, is the Lottery itself because the bank returned the cheque to them. Although it is worth only $8,000 on its face, the signature upon it grants it interminable value. That cheque gets sold on the securities market and it literally travels the world creating a profit each time it is sold. So, your signature has created another fortune, this time for the Lottery. Did they EVER have to dig into their pot of $20M in order to give you your win of $8,000? No. You thought $8,000 was a windfall, but the truth is, bankers profited by far more than you did and it was all funded by you. YOU created your lottery win.

Can you see that the Lottery is simply a cash-confiscatory game for the ones who run it – the World Bank? Can you see that IRS/CRA operates the same way? Can you see that IRS/CRA is just an agency of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank? If you grasp this concept, you'll see that not only do I not "owe" IRS/CRA anything but also I was the source of value which will create egregious revenue for IRS/CRA which has nothing at all to do with the government of U.S.A. or Canada, or the states or the provinces, or the people of either. Its sole purpose is CASH-CONFISCATION. I am certain that you, also, have felt the effects of the IMF on your personal finances. Whatever your loss, it is important for you to know that it was all by design and intention.

Please realize the truth of this, before you consider confiscating, from me, the meagre amount that I have, compared to what IRS/CRA will receive, forever, from my signature. I created ALL the value and IRS/CRA is the beneficiary of that.

Then, please, consider a job more suited to your ethics. You'll feel much happier and your family will be very proud of you.

Authority Hoax II – "the Trust Account" and "the Solution"

Imagine how people will interact with each other when they know they cannot harm another person, place, condition or thing without harming themselves. Imagine the difference when people, everywhere, accept the divine truth: as they give, so shall they receive. – Don Alejandro Cirilo Perez Oxlaj

The Trust Account

In my article, The Authority Hoax, I wrote: 'The only thing you need to know about laws – codes, rules, regulations, statutes, by-laws, ordinances, constitutions, policies, legislations, laws, bills, acts, and even case law – is that they have nothing to do with you. The USA and CANADA, Inc., along with all other corporations (STATE OF CALIFORNIA, PROVINCE OF ALBERTA, etc.) have a Policy Manual, just as SEARS has a Policy Manual for employees. Unless we work for SEARS, their Policy Manual does not apply to us.' The head servant of the mansion's kitchen staff put up a Notice which reads, 'No Refrigerator Raiding: 11 pm to 7 am'. Does the mistress of the house think that this applies to her? The only 'laws' by which we are bound are Nature's laws and our conscience.

For years, I was on the fence between wanting to know who I am and behaving accordingly so that I didn't have to play the commerce game, and wanting to know how to play the game so that I could win the game. It always seemed as if we were getting closer to the answer, but the investigation was interminable. Most researchers continue to look outside, rather than looking to themselves, recalling their experiences, and remembering who they are. It seems that, for all the riding 'madly off in all directions', all their various, personal agenda come down to only this: we are all tired of being controlled.

I notice that those who search legal land for the answer, albeit to no avail, still do learn much in the process and wind up wanting to sell their information because, "I put a lot of time and effort into this and I'm not about to give it away." But, isn't the reason that they did all this research because they wanted to do so? Now they want people to pay them for what they chose to do? The only information worth having is that which will allow us access to the Trust account. The very act of their charging their fellow man evidences that they do not know this, not to mention the dishonor, i.e.; they do to others what the banks are doing to all of us.

Due to all this 'learning', so many researchers have a penchant for wanting to utilize their information and this is what gets them into trouble. They write too much and they say too much – all because they want to be 'right' in thinking that years of study were not spent in vain, so they tend to take on the task of settling public matters, by acting as the liable party, instead of making the public servant do his job. The one who creates the liability, i.e. the public, must provide the remedy. Balancing their books is not our job. They work for us.

People who do not have this valuable information, paradoxically, are very willing to sell and tell what they purport to know. But, if we cannot figure this out by ourselves, it is no good to us. No one can tell us how to know who we are. To become free and to feel free is not a process... it is a realization.

I have received hundreds of emails from people who criticize me for not telling them how to implement what I wrote in my book. If I had included a 'how to' in my book, it would have been outdated by the time it hit the internet. I am stunned by the number of people who missed seeing, in my preface, 'I do not, cannot, and will not tell anyone what to do'. The title of my book is 'How I Clobbered...' not, 'How YOU Can Clobber...' I wrote the book to expose the fraudulent banking system and I did certain things to prove it. My book was simply and only a heads-up so people could think about conducting their commercial affairs accordingly and begin to experiment for themselves. I put the book on the internet free-of-charge. It offers only hints for you to realize who you are, which is all any of us need to know.

Of these hundreds of requests for 'what to do', not one ever asked me about the latter part of my book – 'remembering who you are'; the part about energy – which is all there is. In whatever we do or say, what matters is our energy and the attitude from where we behave, so my 'telling' someone what to say or do is worthless. Becoming free requires 'remembering who you are', so when you come across websites or seminars, just remember; those who sell and tell don't know, and those who DO know cannot tell. 'Knowing' is a private matter and one cannot make it public. The minute it becomes public, the win can no longer stand as a win. I had to look to myself. Accurate answers come effortlessly, from within.

In one of my snits of frustration, recently, I packed it all in (as I do episodically) and read Gregg Braden's book, The Spontaneous Healing of Belief – Shattering the Paradigm of False Limits. He reminded me of what I have known for decades – that we can create... in fact, that's all we can do. We don't do anything but create. We create every aspect of our life experience. If we really knew who we are, we would not be dabbling in any of this commercial investigation, particularly, because every bit of energy we hand over to those who seem to be running the planet only strengthens them. What we want to do is turn away from them and look to ourselves. Why fight someone else's creation when we have our own creating to do? We've already created them as they are; now, we must create something that will override that. As long as we are giving them our time, attention, energy, and emotion (which is what keeps them alive), those whom we most want to convince that we know who we are know that we do NOT know who we are by the very fact that we are involved with them and their silly 'policy manuals'. Dealing with agents, at their level, proves that we believe that the illusion of their authority is real and, ergo, the reality of ours is not. We ought to have nothing to do with them, other than to be sure they keep their word, honor their oaths, and do their jobs. Servants must always be monitored, lest they overstep their position.

If we knew who we are, we would have nothing to do with them. This includes their 'medicine', their 'schools', their 'law', their 'churches', their 'media', etc. – ALL designed to keep us from knowing who we truly are. Somehow, they know this; hence, every time we converse with them, frequent their places of 'worship', argue over 'payment', read their 'newspapers', go to their 'courts', follow or resist their "orders", attend their 'classes', visit their 'doctors', etc., they know that we do not know who we are and they treat us accordingly. If we knew who we were, we would be minding our own health, educating ourselves, conducting our own spiritual development, and not deferring to them for anything.

I simply cannot even imagine the enlightened beings of this planet poring over law books, writing paper, learning what to say in court, filing documents, attending seminars, paying for the latest process, etc. in order to get out of a situation which they know, in their hearts, simply does not involve them. They know who they are. I have concluded that, as long as we are still investigating any aspect of the commerce game, those who control it have us where they want us – IN the game, which they control, by THEIR rules, which apply only to them. I suspect that the less we know about their game, the better off we are. That is their business, not ours – and simply becoming very clear on who we are and acting accordingly is what will get us out of this ludicrous mess. I feel as if I have arrived, which is why I am writing this... now.

I could always sense what was wrong when I heard the latest and greatest information because it was complicated and the documents involved were egregiously long and legal. I always said, "If it isn't simple, it isn't accurate. If most people cannot grasp the concept, then it isn't accurate. If it involves knowing the policies of the Psychopocracy, then it isn't accurate." Consequently, I knew that I would know the truth when it showed up because it would be simple – something that we could all see and grasp (if we truly remembered who we are) and it would have nothing to do with any corporate policy manual.

So, whilst reading Braden's book, the penny dropped... I remembered who I am. I clearly saw all I need to know about how to handle the public. There is a Trust, evidenced by the NAME; my parents were the Grantors of the value, the Province of Ontario registered it, so it is the Owner and Trustee, all public servants are Agents for the Trustee, and, the Trust/NAME itself is the Beneficiary-in-fact. The entire game of Commerce is played for the beneficiaries. Needless to say, the public isn't about to create a game which doesn't benefit them, so, 'beneficiaries' includes them. My parents granted the original value to the NAME/Trust, via their signatures, and, over the years, I gave it value, via my labor. I cannot be involved in commerce so I use the NAME/Trust in order for me to function in a society which is based upon commerce. Think 'Monopoly®™' we require a token to play, and the only money is that within the game. There is no 'money' outside the game.

I guess it is human nature to try to get out of doing one's job, yet, since I stand to lose, it would behoove me to ensure that the servants serve not only themselves but also me. I hold all public Trust corporations in trust, and, if an agent becomes 'un-trust-worthy', e.g.: if he neglects his fiduciary duty and pretends that I am the Trustee – the one responsible for settling and adjusting the Trust's accounts – then, I am obliged to remind him of his oath of office, wherein he has sworn 'to serve and protect' me and my rights. It is the trust owner, trustee, and agents who have a job to do – not I. Since their debts are their business, not mine, and, since the one who creates the liability must provide the remedy, they are the ones required to settle all charges against the Trust. If they refuse, then they are in violation of public policy and the criminal code and I would be obliged to lay claim against them for Breach of the public Trust and Breach of Oath of Office.

Will we soon lay claims against doctors for Breach of their Hippocratic Oath wherein they swear: "I will... never do harm to anyone"? Taking down some of the medical mafia might move 'medicine' out of its present position of the #1 cause of death on this continent.

Maybe we ought to just say that we do not choose to be recognized through the Name and, unless they can prove that we are required to be or that we are a Trust or a Name, why are they trying to get us to pay a debt that belongs to the public, particularly when we cannot 'pay'? There is no money, and we are not even permitted to play the game, let alone incur debt. The charge is against the Trust; who is the Trustee? We are not, so, who is the one required to settle the account? They have the wrong party. We wish we could settle it for them yet we do not have access to the account; we cannot take from it; we can only give value to it. Haven't we done that, already? How could they have set up, for example, a credit card, if we didn't give them the value up front? Now that they have created debt for that account, aren't they the ones liable for the remedy, for setting off the debt, for balancing the account? This has nothing to do with us.

Whoever created the debt is the one responsible for settling it, yet, they will do everything to try to make us liable. But why would any of us willingly go to court? A place where we were not invited, where we have no standing, where our chances of prevailing are almost nil, where we are not being compensated for our time or effort for a charge which has nothing to do with us, and for which the agent for the Trustee is not only already in the court but also the one legally obliged to settle the account for the Trust/Name? I heard that one judge, upon hearing a fellow lament that he is not the Name, ask, "Well, if you're not the Name, why are you here?"

Why have we been doing the servants' work for them? Because they tricked us into believing that we are responsible for balancing the books of the Trust (the name of which we have continuously been told is our 'name' and is not), for which we are NOT Trustee, and we forgot to question this, all because... we had yet to remember who we are.

The Solution: Nothing We Could Ever Have 'Found' – We Had to 'Arrive'.

The only thing in existence in the universe is energy. Knowing how to make that work for us is all we need to know. The only way we can make energy work for us is to know who we are.

Studying rules to a game which appears to be made up and controlled by 'them' is a waste of time. There are only a few things we need to know about 'them'. Our experience of them exists for the same reason that our experience of anything exists – because we created it. We created 'them' and our experiences with them, in order to discover who we are. Our experiences of 'them' are solely for the purpose of our spiritual evolution, which happens to entail challenging ourselves to discover the truth about our power. This is all an illusion and we are simply here to observe our conduct which will reveal the degree to which we realize our all-powerful nature. The reason we cannot win by finding a solution within their rules is because that would ruin the game. We have forgotten that it is OUR game. Our only rule is: we can't win until we remember who we are. It's a Catch 22. We can't win because we don't know who we are but as soon as we remember, the game ceases to exist. Therein lies the win because the game was designed for us to discover ourselves and, when we do, its over.

We created antagonists solely for the drama since 'they' appear to be sub-plots to the main plot which is the drama of observing ourselves. I've noticed that many emails I receive report some form of theft of our basic rights. The most righteous of the writers complain of the new 'laws' which restrict our choices of healthcare. Did it ever cross their minds that this might be good news? If we can't have these 'health products', I guess we'll have to realize who we are, learn that there is nothing outside ourselves, and go about healing ourselves. Whenever I hear about this sort of thing, I always take a look at it from another perspective. When I worked at Banff hospital, someone complained that "The Province is no longer going to pay for" (some procedure). Nurses were angry. I told them that this is good news because this is pushing people to take responsibility for their own health. Medicine or Naturopathy or whatever... they are all external and no matter what 'the Province' does or no longer will do, they are forcing us to get it through our skulls that we can create perfect health all by ourselves. We do not need anything or anyone for the things in life which we have been programmed to believe that we can obtain only from the 'professionals' – teachers, doctors (allopathic or otherwise), ministers, lawyers, etc. Haven't we learned, yet, that none of them is as good as our own intuition, which is our connection to Spirit? Those who send out this sort of news do not know who they are and, maybe, are as threatening to our realization of our personal power as any other well-programmed bureaucrat. The mere fact that some have made distinctions between allopathy and naturopathy tells me that they do not see the distinction between looking within and looking without.

Putting our time, attention, energy, and emotion into trying to correct something which 'appears' to be outside ourselves is what David Icke calls 'combing the mirror'. If we look into the mirror and can only anticipate a 'bad hair day', combing the mirror will not get us out the door any sooner. The only way to change anything that is going on in the mirror is to change the source of the reflection. We are that source.

Knowing who we are is the only thing that will allow us to change how we conduct ourselves which is the only thing that will alter the reflection. Responding to a situation any time but in the here and now will not work. This means that we cannot pre-empt the future and we cannot correct the past. Neither exists. The only thing we can do is respond in the moment. Intending to un-do what we have done in the past, or write documents to stave off potential difficult situations in the future, will only demonstrate to those whom we use for the purpose of discovering where we measure, on our enlightenment scale, that we have not become acquainted with our own unlimited power. If we had, we would not be dallying in affairs which have nothing to do with us. Only in the moment can we deal with what is occurring right now. Our point of power is in the now and any conduct which takes us out of now – into either the past or the future – will not serve us.

I always wanted to pave the way for an easier life and the only thing that I experienced was constant preparedness; I forgot to live in the here and now and, noticing that I have lived nearly six decades, I realize that much of that time has been spent either trying to un-do, balance, make up for my mistakes or prepare for the next situation so that I wouldn't make any more mistakes. I hated getting 'life' wrong because my ego's drug of choice, to cause me to feel 'wrong', was 'regret'.

In case you haven't noticed, our society does not allow for mistakes. We are either threatened not to err or punished if we do. Since the best way to learn is to fail, it behooves us to 'fail fast'. Only then, can we be open to success.

Success is going from failure to failure without any loss of enthusiasm. – Winston Churchill.

Yet, we all live in fear. We actually are not permitted to experience the most efficient way to learn, without severe emotional, not to mention physical, mental, and spiritual repercussions. Our society is designed to keep us from venturing out, experimenting, throwing caution to the wind, because we are kept in fear of making mistakes. Society discourages us from 'living'. We are punished if we don't either make amends or correct our ways. The entire court system, which came from the ego mind, is based upon this.

All the 'attorney wannabes' are studying the rules of a game they cannot win because, if they could actually win, they would no longer need or want to play it. After I jumped out of an aeroplane, I didn't need to do it again. If you know you can do a thing, you don't need to do it, yet we all must do that which we think we cannot do. It seems as if what we all think we cannot do is to state, on the spot, whatever is necessary to empower ourselves to prevail, in the here and now. I always said, "I'm better on paper." What does this tell you? That I didn't trust myself to conduct myself, in the moment, in a manner which demonstrates that I know who I am and that I am capable of demonstrating the love and power that I know I am.

So, people are still digging in the same pit, year after year, with only slight tributaries, instead of surfacing to look around to see that the solution is in the here and now and can be only in the here and now.

You can't plan a miracle. – Philippe Petit.

Their intent, as mine, was to set up a situation so that we could not fail. This is impossible because, since each of us is the creator of our own circumstances, there could never be a 'one-size fits all'. Where one might prevail, by saying the right thing in order to get out of a tight spot, the same words coming from the mouth of another might land him in jail. Therein lays the solution which is the miracle. If we simply BE who we are and act in the moment, we'll create whatever we create, yet, all the while knowing that the circumstance that we create is precisely for our own information which is: to observe where we are on the 'I know I am all love and all powerful' scale.

It seems we have come full cycle. We began by saying, "That's not my name." A dozen years ago, that landed me in jail, but that is only because, although I was cutel
